Daniel is a calculated and creative litigator who has already contributed to several important cases at the federal and provincial levels in courts and administrative tribunals throughout Canada. His meticulous attention to detail and ability to craft novel and creative arguments allow Daniel to aid clients by navigating the legal miasma, simplify complicated issues, and achieve positive results.

Upon graduating from Osgoode Hall Law School with several academic awards and holding research positions assisting leading experts in their fields, Daniel completed his Articles at a prestigious civil litigation boutique in Toronto with a broad practice. During that time, he had the distinct honour of advocating for Indigenous peoples and governments from across Canada in inter-governmental negotiations and in disputes to hold government officials accountable.

Daniel brings his diverse background and unwavering passion to BYLD to help accomplish the goals of the individuals, organizations, and businesses he represents in complex commercial and civil litigation matters.
